

<http://www.fijitimes.com/story.aspx?id=135854>

Expect more cyclones

Monday, December 21, 2009

MORE cyclone activities for the Fiji group are expected in January 2010, says the director of the Fiji Meteorology Department, Rajendra Prasad.

He said the weather had now stabilized after Mick. "It's beginning to warm up now and there will not be any major rainfall for the next few days," he said.

Mr Prasad said El Nino conditions could still dominate until the end of the year. "But we still expect cyclone activity," he said.

He said it had been an early cyclone season for Fiji this year with Mick striking in December and not January, which was considered "the danger month".